Dynamics for Membership

The comprehensive digital solution for membership organisations
Expand your target audience
A major sports association suffered a shrinking membership base. Potential members preferred separate events organised without the association. In response, the association reinvented itself as a hybrid organisation – combining the traditional membership organisation with other types of relationships. With the robust support of DfM, the association managed to identify a sizeable target group (hundreds of thousands) and entice it with a varied offer.
Your membership organisation is facing major challenges. People no longer commit themselves as willingly and make more demands. This trend puts a strain on you as manager(s). For example, how do you keep your membership organisation healthy without growth? Your organisation must continue to achieve its mission and retain solid finances.

The solution is to implement new service concepts for and innovative relationships with your members. You also want your primary processes to run smoothly and at 100% efficiency. To do so, you need a powerful IT platform which ensures that you have a full overview of your current and potential members. Such a platform will generate data that allow you to make them a suitable offer. This well-integrated platform is called Dynamics for Membership (DfM). KPMG will assist in the implementation and the realisation of all the advantages – whether your organisation has about 20,000 or over a million members.
Six imperatives

Dynamics for Membership (DfM) empowers membership organisations in turbulent times to work on:

1. Recruitment

Facilitate the online registration process for willing and able potential members. Offer a handy interface where they can register quickly and choose between a range of service concepts as well as membership types. Also ensure your visibility on social media – for example, by enabling ambassador members through DfM.

2. Retention

You will retain members by paying specific attention to them at the right time. To this end, DfM helps you gather and analyse data. As a result, you can pinpoint when members consider quitting, among other things. You may link the insights gained by using digital marketing methods. One example is basing email flows on member life cycles so members will receive messages at a critical time for them personally.

3. Engagement

Your members want to be active and to receive optimal support in their activities. Examples include planning matches or events, or exchanging experiences with other members. DfM enables members to find each other on the platform and fully supports the processes surrounding your core activity or activities. Personalisation will make matters personal.
You would like to offer your members more in order to keep them engaged and loyal. In addition, you want to be visible and relevant to the outside world. DfM facilitates the negotiation of alliances with other parties such as retailers, health insurers or other partners and their product range. They can integrate useful apps, offer products and services, and charge them directly on your platform.

You require insight into your target audience and the effect of your activities in order to target them as well as make them effective. By integrating all aspects on a single platform, you will also combine all data. DfM lets you analyse these data, predict behaviour, identify opportunities and improve your service provision.

Existing membership organisations are threatened by many trends. It is therefore vital to be flexible and able to shift focus quickly. The best defence is a good offence. Make your organisation scalable by migrating your entire front and back office to the cloud. As an added benefit, this process will accelerate the implementation of new functionalities. Finally, DfM will facilitate your negotiation of new alliances and your introduction of new offerings.
Manage accreditations
Trade associations use valuable accreditations. This process requires reliable registration of accredited members and up-to-date information. DfM helps organisations to manage for up-to-date information, train members and accredit trainers – for example, by sending regular update reminders. The information will also be easily accessible to external stakeholders, with exactly the right level of data protection.
This is DfM
