

DevOps rich Software Engineering

Why DevOps?

Getting your product in your customers hands can be an intimidating aspect of software delivery and a large risk factor for your stakeholders. A culture of DevOps facilitated by the infrastructure and tooling will best minimize any risk your team has with the return on your software investment.

What can DevOps do for my software delivery?

Your team's ability to deliver predictably and consistently is crucial to understanding your business's costs, investments and efficiencies. By implementing DevOps infrastructure and its best practices you are best able to enable your Developers to focus on new product features while allowing your Product Owner to manage when/what is released on to your end customers. Always Auditable and Always Shippable are the mantras, and DevOps is the path forward.

◆ To successfully implement continuous delivery, you need to change the culture of how an entire organization views software development efforts.

~Tommy Tynjü

◆ DevOps simply adds the idea that small, cross-functional teams should own the entire delivery process from concept through user feedback and production monitoring.

~ Mark Schwartz
