Transform Productivity with Microsoft Teams

Communication & collaboration in the workplace has recently seismically shifted to require more than just simple back-and-forth conversations. Today's modern workplace has transformed to embrace persistent chat as the core of productivity. This core, tightly integrated with the other facets of work and the systems that facilitate them, along with centralized governance and security, provide a best-of-breed productivity platform that gives your organization the competitive edge.

Slack was a primary catalyst of this change and remains a prominent player. However, in a world where Office 365 reigns king in the content & collaboration space, it is a task to remain competitive. While Slack successfully addresses many requirements in this space, it falls short in its ability to deeply integrate with the Office 365 ecosystem.

Microsoft has clearly recognized the value of this new productivity model with it's huge investment in building Microsoft Teams. The current feature comparison, continued roadmap of innovation, deep integration with Office 365 and the fact that this is already bundled with your current O365 licensing, makes a migration evaluation a no-brainer.

Why should you migrate from Slack to Microsoft Teams?

- Reduced Costs - Slack can be very expensive! If your organization is utilizing Office 365, Microsoft Teams comes already included with your licensing.
- Improved Functionality - Microsoft Teams has strong feature parity with Slack. Additionally, it adds full featured document management in SharePoint, voice and video conferencing, meeting scheduling, task management and much more.
- Fully Integrated - Microsoft Teams is a part of the Office 365 suite. This means deep integration and the facility to use other Microsoft products right within the platform out-of-the-box.
