at École Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne (EPFL)

EPFL (École Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne) is a top-notch technical university based in Lausanne, Switzerland. Ranked in the world top-20 technical universities, EPFL hosts close to 11'000 students and 4'000 employees.

Originally developed as a student project, the PocketCampus app became EPFL's official mobile solution in 2014. The university's management had the desire to embrace the mobile wave and provide the students with an easy and centralized way to access IT services from their smartphone. The target audience for the app was later expanded to include services dedicated admin and teaching staff.

The PocketCampus app at EPFL offers students study-related features, such as their personalized course schedule, exam results, access to course material, and the ability to print documents in one tap, as well as features useful for their life on campus, such as a detailed campus map, the cafeterias menus, the events agenda, and more.

While these features exist in some form on the university's website, the ease-of-use, the fun, and the all-in-one user experience offered by the PocketCampus solution drive most students to use it as a primary tool to access this information on a daily basis.

Over the years, the PocketCampus team has proven its ability to provide a deeply integrated and reliable solution, and developed a strong relationship with the university's management, as explains Didier Rey, former delegate of the Vice-President of EPFL Information Systems:

« Our relationship with the PocketCampus team is excellent. Their professionalism, efficiency, and reactivity have resulted in PocketCampus at EPFL being a highly popular and appreciated app, on which thousands of students and employees rely daily. Their capacity to innovate, their extensive experience, and their ability to collaborate with different entities make us confident that EPFL's mobile future is in good hands. »
