A digital world is an informed world — leaving decision-makers with more knowledge and control than ever before.

Sales organizations can no longer function as gatekeepers of the information buyers need to make purchasing decisions. The evolving digital landscape presents new complexities that sellers must adapt to in order to deliver the customer experience buyers not only want but now demand.

B2B selling has changed forever.

A prospective buyer no longer relies on the first call with a salesperson to understand their options when it comes to solving a business challenge and the costs and terms associated with it.

With increased information access and price transparency, buyers aren’t just showing up with stronger expectations for consistent pricing, but also demanding the superior experiences that mirror the simplicity of shopping in their B2C worlds.

What makes B2B selling more complex?

- Informed Buyers
- More Influencers
- Price Transparency
- Complex Product Offerings
- Desire for Seller-Free Experiences
Buyers increasingly want seller-free experiences—forcing sales teams to rethink the role they play in the purchasing journey.

With buyers having access to the information they would traditionally engage with a sales rep for, salespeople must evolve to understand the needs of the customer and add value that’s going to more seamlessly move them through the buying process. Thus, creating an experience that feels meaningful, personalized, and always relevant.

The expectation of sales reps is evolving
The best price piques interest.
The best experience gets picked.

Experience wins. And though it’s a commodity in our daily lives, businesses are in search of more than just the lowest cost. Buyers want vendors who understand their company and products and can ultimately help them work better, faster, and seamlessly across channels.

This puts pressure on sales leaders to have systems in place for sales reps to optimize every interaction from the moment of engagement. From speed and responsiveness to a harmonized omnichannel experience, sellers have to do more than offer less to meet the demands of digital buyers.
B2B organizations can no longer rely solely on the salesperson or client relationship to drive growth in the new digital economy.

For businesses to sustain a competitive edge, they must accelerate digital transformation by standing up new digital channels while harmonizing sales between these digital channels and their existing sales channels.

By 2025, 60% of B2B sales organizations will transition from experience- and intuition-based selling to data-driven selling, merging their sales process, applications, data, and analytics into a single operational practice.
What Can Businesses Do?

As companies look into adding differentiated value, leaders must acknowledge that sales reps’ understanding of customer needs can no longer be left up to experience or intuition alone.

Increasingly, sales leaders are asking how they can:

- Provide sales with technology to drive valuable customer engagements?
- Help sellers respond to customers with speed and precision?
- Create processes to drive adoption?
- Optimize their selling motions?

Sales Leaders must equip sellers to meet the demands of today’s buyers:

- Deliver valuable insights for complex sales scenarios
- Invest in digital tools that augment sales intelligence, and drive acceleration into sales cycles
- Implement data-driven, decision-making processes in the sales cycle
- Deploy integrated selling motions that bring together digital and traditional sales
